MAN CHARGES HIS LIFE'S WRONGS TO BROTHER WHO IS HIS DOUBLE

An Amazing Story In Real Life That Seems As Improbable as Fiction—And Yet Alfred D. Oliver, Georgia Banker, Has Gone Through Fire of Hell for Another's Deeds.

Americus, Ga., Feb. 23.—Twin brothers, separated in early boyhood, have furnished for the criminal history of the South its most remarkable case of dual identity.

Alfred D. Oliver, ex-banker and ex-social leader, has just stepped out of prison, after serving a sentence for a crime, he alleges, was committed by his twin brother, Louis C. Oliver.

Also, Alfred served a four-year sentence for bigamy because Louis' wife insisted that he (Alfred) was her husband, Louis.

The twin brothers look so nearly alike that their friends, their relatives even, could not tell the one from the other.

One twin grew up prosperous, respected, honest—he has just come out of a prison cell.

The other is alleged to have grown into the "black sheep"—and to have committed the crime for which the former was punished.

These Oliver twins were born 49 years ago at Climax, Ga.. They were dressed alike, acted alike, and were the image of each other. Even their playmates did not know the difference.
